

Testing Anxiety Documentation Guidelines

Beginning with the revisions to the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) in 2008, test anxiety is no longer considered a disability under federal law.

If you are applying for academic accommodations related to anxiety, you must have a diagnoses of an anxiety disorder (such as Generalized Anxiety Disorder) and documentation must include examples of area of your life in which anxiety creates a disability beyond the testing situation.